THE MISSING 700,000: EXPLAINING BOLIVIA'S FAMILY'S UNDER-COVERAGE FROM A SOCIO-CUL TURAL PERSPECTIVE

YOLANDA K. BORJAMES
ADVISOR: JENNIFER BANNING

ABSTRACT
In October 2013, the Bolivian conditional cash transfer program, Beba Familias, began 5 years after the program's administration initiated a new plan to find these families, rectifying the problem. Yet even when families participate in the program, they may still be missing. My thesis seeks to provide an explanation for why these families are remaining, using sociocultural approaches. I argue that in low-income families, cultural values and beliefs are closely intertwined with the program's participation. By understanding these values and beliefs, we can better understand why some families are choosing not to enroll.

HYBRID INDIFFERENCE IN GEOGRAPHICAL CONFLICT: A STUDY OF SECOND-GENERATION IRANIAN-AMERICAN ASIMILATION

SHEERAA GOLBABA
ADVISOR: AMIR ABOZIZ

ABSTRACT
The history of South Korea is as tumultuous as the jagged Taebaek mountain range. The country has faced many trials and tribulations, including imperial domination, war, and economic turmoil. In the face of these challenges, South Korea has emerged as a modern nation with a vibrant culture and economy. This study examines the role of South Korea's history in the lives of second-generation Iranian-American families. By using data from interviews and surveys, my research explores the factors that influence assimilation and identity formation in this group.

ABSTRACT
The project explores the role of gender roles in South Korea's public and private spheres. Using data from interviews and surveys, my research examines the factors that influence gender roles and their impact on the lives of South Korean women. By understanding these factors, we can better understand the challenges that women face and identify potential solutions to promote equality.

A HIPHOP HABITUS: A LYRICAL LIFESTYLE FOR YOUNG BLACK MALES

TERRANCE MOORE
ADVISOR: THOMAS BILLER

ABSTRACT
This research aims to answer the question: why young Black urban males and women develop a hip hop habitus. The study is inspired by Pierre Bourdieu’s theory of habitus and explores the ways in which young Black males develop a hip hop habitus. The research is based on interviews with young Black males and women who have developed a hip hop habitus. The data collected in this study will contribute to our understanding of how young Black males and women develop a hip hop habitus.
