

Joint Concentration in Sociology – Statement of Intent

A joint concentration integrates two undergraduate concentrations into a coherent field of study and requires a thesis. As such, the ability to plan and conduct a project that demonstrates synthesis of the two fields is critical in the choice of the concentration. This looks different in every case. However, students who wish to pursue a joint concentration in Sociology are required to apply sociological theories and methods in their thesis. We ask you to briefly outline your idea for your thesis on this form, and to indicate that you've discussed the plan with the Sociology ADUS (Emily Fairchild, efairchild@fas.harvard.edu) and the ADUS (or DUS or faculty thesis advisor) in your other program.

Proposed thesis topic and method that integrates both fields:

I have discussed this plan with faculty advisors in both fields and have confirmed that such a thesis will be satisfactory to both programs. I understand that I am responsible for maintaining communication with each department to ensure I fulfill the appropriate course requirements and meet thesis expectations of both fields.
